Meharban Singh

Once I completed my 12th grade, I took a year to learn and understand explore and strengthen my understanding of technology, particularly in networking concepts. During this time, I focused on learning how networks operate and connect devices. I researched topics like IP addresses, which are essential for identifying devices on a network, and network topologies, which describe how devices are arranged and communicate with each other. I also explored how the internet works, including concepts like data transmission, DNS, and protocols that ensure smooth communication between systems. This self-study gave me valuable insights into how technology powers the modern digital world, further solidifying my interest in pursuing a degree in Computer and Information Science.
