Handwritten signature and date: 2/10/25

After completing my 12th grade, I realized that I was uncertain about the specific career path I wanted to pursue. At the time, I had always excelled in all my subjects, but I wasn't sure how these interests aligned with a long-term career. I felt that rushing into a decision about my career without fully understanding my own passions and strengths might lead to a choice I would later regret. Instead of jumping straight into another academic course or university application, I decided to give myself the opportunity to explore a variety of fields. I researched different career options and studied the different concepts of business and management also, talked to professionals. I had gained clarity about my future goals. I realized that my interests and strengths were aligned with a career in business administration, where I could apply my analytical skills, work on strategic problem-solving, and lead teams. I felt that a formal education in business would equip me with the knowledge and skills to navigate the complexities of the business world and give me the tools to manage both people and processes effectively
