"It was never a textbook or classroom that first taught me about human behavior—it was the stories I witnessed while working in the field. After completing my senior secondary in 2022 I volunteered in rural areas to distribute food and sanitary supplies. There, I encountered people suffering not just from poverty, but from emotional neglect, anxiety, and trauma. I realized many struggles were linked to mental health issues often ignored due to stigma and lack of awareness. These interactions deeply moved me and sparked my interest in understanding human behavior and emotional well-being. I saw how crucial psychological support is, especially in underserved communities. This experience inspired me to pursue a Bachelor's in Psychology to help bring awareness, healing, and support where it's most needed.
