After finishing school, I became fascinated by the rapid rise of food delivery apps during the pandemic. Rather than just using them, I became curious about the logistics behind these platforms—how they handled real-time operations, connected restaurants and drivers, and ensured smooth service at scale. To dive deeper, I spent my gap year studying successful food delivery models like UberEats and Zomato, analyzing their strategies and identifying what made them work. I even explored how a local delivery service could operate in my community. I quickly realized that starting and scaling such a business required more than just enthusiasm—it needed solid business acumen. This discovery led me to pursue a BBA to gain the knowledge needed to turn my insights into a well-structured, successful business plan.
